At Nexicom we strongly believe in the vital importance of supporting the people and charitable efforts to give. In this astoundingly beautiful video, freeskier Candide Thovex shows us how it's done.

Give, If You Can't Volunteer:

When you let your friends and family know your acts of generosity, they may find themselves more motivated to undertake their own efforts to give. Research shows that participants who chose to donate a portion of their income enjoyed activated pleasure centres in the brain. Donating simply makes you feel better, which is something we can all benefit from.

When your kids see you volunteering your time or donating to charity, they're more likely to adopt a giving and generous mindset. When you help others in any way you can, you're willing to help others in any way you can. Giving money is the perfect solution. Writing out a cheque is a simple way to show meals for hungry children, much needed medical attention, or improved quality of life. You don't need $10,000 to make a difference in someone's life. Even just a few dollars or some of your time can result in providing not only meals or medical attention, but also a chance for someone in need to experience the joy of giving.

Promote Generosity in Your Children:
